5 Year Tourism Strategy Released

The Nova Scotia Tourism Agency released a five-year tourism strategy on Friday, May 24th, that aims to increase the number of overnight visitors by one per cent annually through a more co-ordinated approach to industry development and promotion. The plan, the result of more than a year of consultations involving government, industry and other stakeholders, was created to help end a decade of gradual decline in the province's tourism sector. Besides hiking visitor numbers, the goal is also to grow tourism revenues by four per cent a year, as well as maintain the number of room nights sold outside Halifax at 2012 levels. TIANS president Darlene Grant Fiander said another focus is putting policy in place to address some of the challenges facing the industry, including a need for better transportation links and updated infrastructure.

A copy of the plan can be viewed or downloaded at:
